

Abstract

The present invention provides an organic light emitting device comprising an anode, a cathode, and an organic layer disposed between the anode and the cathode, wherein the organic layer comprises a host material, an alkali metal or an alkaline earth metal, and a metal binding agent. In a preferred embodiment, the organic layer is an electron transport layer in which the metal binding agent may confine the alkali metal or the alkaline earth metal.